

Deirdre Cartwright (guitar), Geoff Nicholls (drums), and Henry Thomas (bass) are the musician presenters in ROCKSCHOOL, a new eight-part series premiering on most public television stations the week of October 20. (Check local listings.) Combining the excitement of rock and contemporary music with public television's educational mission, the series teaches basic instrumental technique and music theory associated with blues, rock, funk, reggae and new wave styles.

Thanks for the pic Deirdre, but wouldn't the Beeb's budget run to more than a photo copy?

Dear Stuart,

Just thought you might be interested in what's happening as regards Rockschool. The first series has been sold to Australia, Canada and networked across America - I just received a mass of publicity material in the post as I was unable to fly to New York for the launch because I was on tour in Germany at the time. It sounds like they're going completely over the top about the programme over there and we've had enthusiastic support from people like Leonard Bernstein.

It even looks like the BBC has decided to go ahead with a second series, recording starts Autumn 1986 so please keep me informed of any new products or ideas you're developing.

Best wishes

Deirdre Cartwright.
